Victoria Manning simply didn't need men. She liked them as friends or family members; but, in the house, getting in the way, tracking mud on the good carpet. No. Emphatically not. She read an offer in the newspaper offering a position as a wife with exactly the description of marriage she wanted.

Nathan Burdette didn't want a wife. The Millionaire ran his life as he wished. He didn't have time or desire to give a woman the kind of attention she wanted. However, he didn't have a choice. Not if he wanted the gold mine his father left him. The will said he must marry and produce an heir within a year. It couldn't be broken.

Victoria answered the ad. Nathan was pleased. She was pretty and independent and wanted to raise a child. Victoria liked the look of her soon-to-be husband. Nathan was tall, handsome and independent.

After a stop at the Justice of the Peace, they stood in their hotel room, looking at the bed in front of them, frozen with fear.
