Boyd will do anything to avoid his cousin Coco—even pretend to be gay. He's visiting his dad who's got a broken arm, and all he wants is for her to leave him alone, so Boyd calls his best friend to come rescue him. That's what friends do, right? His father swears that karma is going to bite him on his butt for lying, but Boyd can't think of any other way to extricate himself from Coco's clutches.

Harrison will do anything for his best friend—even pretend to be his fake boyfriend, because he's awesome like that. Once he arrives, though, Boyd surprises him with a “practice” kiss, which is just totally uncalled for. Before Harrison can fend him off, they're on the bed making out. How does he get into these crazy situations? Oh yeah, Boyd and his wacky ideas. Harrison's going to make him pay for this (even if he kind of secretly enjoyed it) because that's how karma works.
