Emily is a thirteen year old girl who is devastated by her parents' impending divorce and who is blindly loyal to her father. Wandering on the shore near the beach house she shares with her mother, Susie, she strikes up a friendship with an itinerant artist who compulsively paints mandalas, each segment unfolding to reveal truths about the human condition.

Emily focuses her fury on her mother, develops a prickly attitude toward her aunt with whom she previously had a companionable rapport and shows intense hostility toward Jake, a male friend and confidant of her mothers at work, who she feels is edging her father out of the picture. Her adored father looms like an infallible god in Emily's psyche until his feet of clay are too obvious to ignore. By then the strange little artist-guru has revealed, through his final mandala, a design for living that has sparked dormant maturity in most of the players—and illuminated guideposts amidst tangled emotions.
