MY FATHER--MY SON JR., EDWARD G. With William Dufty ROBINSON

The arc of his life is not a pretty one. There were birthday parties with other children of other celebrities. Then the stories turn dark: Injuring himself slightly when he was 16 and out in his expensive convertible, hitting two cars at Willoughby and Hudson avenues in Hollywood. At 19, he eloped to Tijuana with the first of his three wives. His furious father threw him out of the house at 910 N. Rexford Drive and cut off his $70 weekly ($524.97 USD 2006) allowance. He and his wife split up and reconciled several times until she finally divorced him three years later. He was arrested for drunk driving, being drunk and disorderly, and charged with holding up cabdrivers, although the jury deadlocked in that case. Here and there, he turned up in a few movies and TV shows: "Screaming Eagles" and "Tank Battalion"; "Laramie," "Wagon Train" and "Gunsmoke." And he appears as Johnny Paradise with George Raft in "Some Like it Hot" in scenes set at a resort that was actually the Del Coronado. By the time he was 38, he was so ill that his lawyer warned the judge he might not survive a 90-day jail sentence for drunk driving. And in February 1974, at the age of 40, Edward G. Robinson Jr. was dead.
